

Co-existing mental health, substance use and gambling problems are the rule not the exception

At least 50% of people who attend mental health services are likely to have co-existing substance use disorders

At least 70% of people who attend alcohol and drug services are likely to have co-existing mental health disorders

At least 70% of people who attend a problem gambling service are likely to have a co-existing mental health or substance use disorder

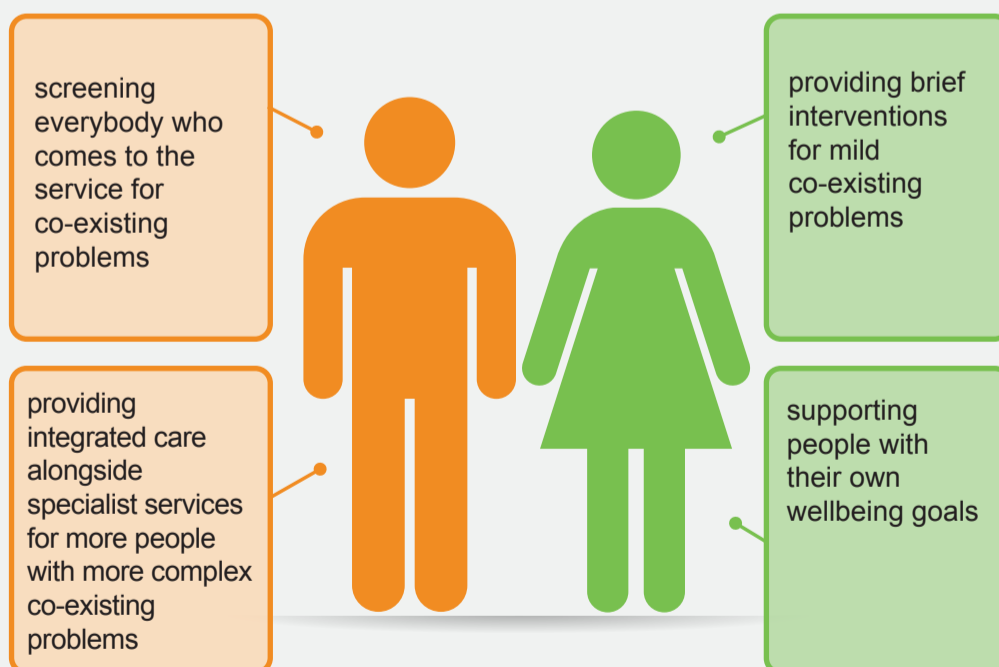

Any door is the right door

All mental health and addiction services need to be welcoming, hopeful, person and whānau focussed to ensure that 'any door is the right door' when someone wants help.

How to respond

Person and whānau focussed services respond to the needs of people with co-existing problems by:
